The American Family is in crisis and, if left unchecked, this crisis will wreak havoc on a national level.

The American family caught a glimpse of its true self throughout the spring of 2020. In the reflection was the true dynamic of how each person functions, or does not function, within the family unit. From social media memes to six-feet apart neighborhood chats, from Zoom classrooms to Facetime holiday celebrations, a major theme began to bubble up as parents and children were forced to give up everything except time with each other.

- 38% of parents suffered from a mental disorder during the pandemic
- 94% of parents feel inadequate to share the gospel message with their children
- Less than 1% of Christians have a written family plan to lead and guide them

Terence Chatmon takes experience leading Fortune 500 through crisis and now leads American Families to positive solutions.

Chatmon, Chief Executive Officer of Victorious Family and former senior executive in Fortune 500 companies such as Johnson & Johnson, Citicorp, and The Coca-Cola Company, knows it takes strategies mixed with laser focus on finding solutions to lead people through major crises. Victorious Family was created to equip kingdom-minded parents to build kingdom-legacy homes. Chatmon and his team have a multifaceted approach to reaching their audience, but at the core of it all is creating a desire to build disciples of Jesus throughout the workforces of the world. Chatmon desires to build a better home through better businesspeople.

Terence and His Faith

Decades ago, Terence realized there was a greater return on investment to be had - salvation - and through Bible study and dedication to the non-profit sector, Terence and his teams have been able to reach thousands of families for the faith. His experience as a chaplain, Church Elder and Teaching Leader for Bible Study Fellowship, combined with his intellectual pursuit of the faith through his Honorary Doctorate in Leadership and Philosophy allow him to think and lead with passion and truth.

What started as a challenge from his wife has led to his life's greatest mission: teaching families to build structure around raising children in a faith they can defend at any age of their life. Do Your Children Believe is a book, conference, program, and ultimately lifestyle for all who claim Christ.
